

Expanding Uniting Aid's capacity to help thousands.

Brikmakers understands that during tough economic times those who suffer most are the severely disadvantaged and the vulnerable. That's why our proudly Western Australian company is delighted to have been able to help provide Uniting Aid with the added resources needed to meet the growing demand for its wonderful relief services.

To distribute more food, clothing and other assistance you need a bigger physical base.

For years, Uniting Aid's focus has been on delivering emergency relief to a fairly even mix of refugees, Indigenous Australians and other Western Australian individuals and families in need.

Annually, over 2,000 adults and even more children have been helped, despite the fact that the building and storage space available in the Nollamara facility remained unchanged.

Fortunately, thanks to a dynamic team of hands-on sponsors, led by Northerly Group and its Director, Michael Lawson, and supported by BGC and Brikmakers and a large number of generous contractors and suppliers, the constraining lack of space was tackled head-on.

Double the space means room to re-double the urgent relief efforts.

The City of Stirling has amongst the highest refugee-intake rates of any local government area in Australia.

Combine this fact with the increasing levels of homelessness and other social problems and it's not hard to understand why Uniting Aid's services and support are so essential.
